By the time you read this, early voting will be well underway. Our next meeting is just the day before Election Day, so we are literally on the home stretch!

I can't believe there has been a 3rd assassination attempt on Former President Donald Trump! I am in agreement with many political pundits that the left is encouraging these attempts with the language they are using in reference to Donald Trump and his campaign. We need to continue to be in prayer daily for his and his family's safety as well as our country. I'm praying for the red wave that never panned out in 2022. So much uncertainty surrounds our country we need to keep our eyes and ears open, and be careful, but not afraid.

I'm loving all the interviews and other public appearances Harris is making that are exposing her as the phony opportunist she really is. If you haven't seen Candice Owens' recent podcasts on You Tube, here is a link to get you started. See her evidence from research on Kamala's actual heritage (basic question, is she really 'black?'), starting with Episode 71: Candace Owens research on Kamala Harris Family Tree. If you subscribe to her channel on You Tube, you can see all of them in order. Harris' photo op with the military jet to 'deliver relief goods' to families impacted by the hurricanes in the South-eastern US was a big backfire! Also insightful was Tucker Carlson's interview with a former Harris co-worker (you can watch here: Tucker Carlson's interview of Hameet Dhillon). She really spilled the beans on Harris' past and it just all falls into place when you watch this!

Trump's ad campaign to discredit Harris is awesome. It's the best laughs I get any day I see them. Using her own words against her is priceless!

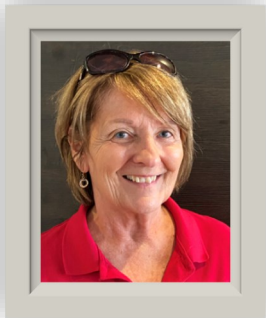

If you haven't already get out there and vote! Use the Golden Ticket in this newsletter as a guide on your selections and take your early ballot to the library for early voting, rather than mailing. They are cautioning not to wait until election day to vote, because it could be so easy for systems to fail and there would be no more recourse. So vote early and straight down the ballot!

SPOTLIGHT MEMBER — RON SILVA

I can be seen at every Marine Corps League event, camera in hand, recording for posterity untold numbers of Memorials, meetings, Marine Corps Balls, fundraisers, and other events. I am the person the League counts on, and I try my best, to photograph every tiny detail of its events. I did not declare as a young boy that I wanted to one day be a photographer. However, I always knew I would be a Marine.

I was born and raised in Rhode Island and had one older brother. As did many other young boys during that time, at 12 years of age, I delivered newspapers after school and on weekends and set up pins in a bowling alley from 6:30 pm until 11 pm Monday through Friday nights and from 1pm until 3pm on Saturdays. At 15 I also began working at a local amusement park during the summer. At 16 I began delivering the morning paper in my car, starting at 5am until about 6:30am, and worked at an icehouse after school from 4pm until 8pm. I graduated from High School in 1956, at the age of 17, and took a job as a counterman in a local restaurant until September when I did what I always had said I would: I enlisted in the Marine Corps. I was 17 at the time and spent my 18th birthday in Boot Camp on Parris Island, South Carolina. Following Boot Camp I went to Camp Geiger, a satellite facility of Camp Lejeune in Jacksonville, North Carolina, where I went through four weeks of advanced infantry training.

One of the highlights of my service in the Marine Corps was receiving an award from a Marine that I had read about when I was 13 or 14 years old. Lt. Colonel David M. Shoup had been awarded the Medal of Honor for his heroism in the Battle of Tarawa, in 1943. I had read about and admired him as a real Marine. I read the book, "Tarawa, Bloody Tarawa. Then in 1959, in Okinawa, three-star General David M. Shoup, my hero, gave me a "Leatherneck Award" for a high qualification with the rifle. It was ironic that the Marine I had held in the highest regard and who was my choice of a true hero was now presenting me with an award.

I completed my military service in September, 1959, and went home to Rhode Island. In September, 1960, myself, and a friend went to Southern California. I drove tractor-trailers for 7 years before once again, returning to R. I. in 1967. By then, I was married and had two children with another one due in November. I was looking to get transferred into the local Teamsters Union or into a trade of some sort. In April of 1968, I had the chance to get into the piping industry as a sprinkler fitter, installing fire protection systems. Many of the jobs I worked on meant leaving early Monday mornings and returning Friday evening. Because apprentices started at a low pay, I also worked Friday and Saturday nights from 6pm until 2:30am at the same restaurant I worked at after graduating from high school. When I started making more money on my job, approx. 3 yrs later, I was able to stop working nights on the week-ends and began devoting my time to youth organizations. My children were in Little League and Pop Warner Football, and I helped with those organizations. For many years, I coached different sports and was President, or on the Board of Directors, for more than twenty years. I was also a Little Lg. Commissioner. I have a Baseball Complex and a Tournament named after me.

Then, in 1968, a completely different career came into my life. I had taken a team picture of my son's Little League team and the following year; I was asked by a few other coaches if I would take photos of their teams. The next year I was asked to photograph all the teams. I was now the Lgs. official photographer. The following year I was asked by five Little Leagues and three Pop Warner Football Leagues to do their photos—and my new career took off. I was soon recruited by basketball and soccer leagues to do their photos and before long, I was sought out to photograph weddings, class reunions, family reunions, schools, and other events. This new career meshed well with my construction job because most photo events are taken on weekends. When I finally retired from construction in 1997, I continued with my photography business full time.

In 2008, I was recruited to join Marine Corps Lg. Detachment 1285, in Somerset, Massachusetts, and soon became their official photographer. In 2010, while visiting Lake Havasu, I met George Link, owner of AZ Flags and Flagpoles, who proceeded to recruit me into Havasu's Detachment 757. It just so happened that at my first meeting the Lg's. photographer stated that he could no longer be their photographer. I said I would help—and I have been Detachment 757's photographer ever since.

One of my proudest and most surprising photo times was when I was contacted by "Parade" magazine. "Parade" wanted to use one of my photos as their cover photo. I had taken a photo of two young girls in Patriotic costumes enjoying the Bristol Fourth of July parade, the longest running Fourth of July parade in the country. "Parade" did in fact use my photo for their cover. The circulation, in 2010, had millions of readers.

And then, I was asked by the President of the London Bridge Republican Women's organization, LaJuana Gillette, to take photos at their meetings. Their guest speakers are often well-known political figures.

What I do for them is nothing compared to what they do for all of us!

Ron camped out on military exercises in 1959 in Okinawa, Japan. It was chow time and he was eating out of his mess gear using the flat portion of the fender for a table.

Photographer Ron, took this pic at the October 5 meeting. These people stepped up to pay the additional $500 needed to pay the balance for the Hwy 40 Banner. Much thanks to you all...

Beginning of the end of the Obama-Biden Democratic Party.....By Clarice Feldman

Harris and Walz have made a thing of "turning the page," but the page that must be turned is the one they are on.

In recent years, beginning with Obama, the Democratic party has become unmoored from its basic center-left policies and embraced ideas and policies that are illogical, absurd, and increasingly unpopular. Things like these:

- Allowing open borders coupled with a very generous social welfare system to be tapped by all who enter;
- Endorsing chemical castration of children and allowing transgender women into the private spaces of actual women;
- Engaging in endless wars in which we have no genuine national stake;
- Supporting UNWRA, which exists solely to attack our longtime ally Israel;
- Issuing regulations that limit productivity in everything in the name of preventing the chimerical and unproven climate change;
- Fighting all efforts to make national elections auditable;
- Ignoring the violence on college campuses;
- Committing significant First Amendment violations and pursuing frivolous lawsuits against their opponents;
- Defunding the police and allowing crime to flourish in blue cities;
- Embracing corrupt dictatorial international bodies like WHO and WEF;
- Promoting DEI policies that are discriminatory and result in ethnic and racial identity, rather than merit, being the criteria for hiring and promoting employees.

Looking at some tea leaves, I see the beginning of the end of this party as presently constituted. It will soon have to refashion itself, jettison its most outrageous members and their notions, or be replaced by another new party altogether.

The elimination of Yahya Sinwar, head of Hamas, in Rafah this week exposed once again the moronic foreign policies of the Harris-Biden team. Both hailed it, and Harris, with outrageouschutzpah, claimed credit for it, though the administration is surely responsible for this having taken longer than it should have.

As late as March of this year, Harris was still working to keep Hamas intact:

"I have studied the maps... It would be a huge mistake for Israel to go into Rafah."

For months, the Administration warned Israel not to go into Rafah.

In mid-March, US officials told the Politico news site that US President Joe Biden would consider limiting future military aid to Israel if Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu moved ahead with an offensive against Hamas in the southern Gaza Strip city of Rafah...

Vice President Kamala Harris famously said at the time that she had "studied the maps" and that an operation was not viable, while warning of potential consequences...

The intense global pressure led to months of delay, but the Rafah offensive eventually went ahead in May regardless, with Israel successfully evacuating the civilian population ahead of its push into the city...

In fact, shortly before Sinwar was killed in a firefight, Secretary of Defense Lloyd Austin and Secretary of State Antony Blinken sent a letter to Prime Minister Netanyahu threatening an arms embargo unless it met the Administration's absurd demands respecting Gaza. Now Harris says, "Justice has been served, and the United States, Israel, and the entire world are better off as a result." Now Biden says, "This is a good day for Israel, the United States and the world."

National security adviser Jacob Sullivan even asserts that U.S. intelligence had helped Israel locate Sinwar. (If they knew where he was, why did they fight so hard to keep Israel away from a man they concede is a U.S. enemy?)

Biden argued that going into Rafah would extend the fighting forever. The Israelis finally ignored these threats, and some recruits spotted Sinwar, who, after murdering the six hostages he had kept with him underground as insurance, scampered out of a tunnel, and they eliminated him. Saturday, there were scenes of hundreds of Gazans leaving Rafah for sheltered areas in the north or surrendering. The cesspool that the Administration prevented from being sanitized will now surely be cleaned out rapidly.

It's hard not to be contemptuous of those who promulgated and endorsed the Biden-Harris nitwit strategy and now try to pretend they are happy that Israel's ignoring them did the trick:

Secretary Blinken: "Yahyah Sinwar was responsible for the murder of thousands of Israelis, Americans, and Citizens of more than 30 countries. His decision to launch the terror attacks on October 7 unleashed catastrophic consequences on the people of Gaza. The world is a better place with him gone."

Tea Leaves In the early 1980s, I worked for the Department of Justice, making several trips to the USSR, and to me it was clear the place was crumbling. It's in small details that the bigger picture often becomes clear. For example, how in the USSR, censorship crippled their economy. The desire to keep a lid on free expression, for example, meant that computers and typewriters were kept under strict state controls, and even photocopies had to be recorded by subject and number of pages and approved by bureaucrats up the line. Yes, it meant unapproved writers and opinions had to go through hoops to hand copy and distribute views contrary to the state's. No modern state, however, could survive and thrive this way, was my view. Here's how I'm reading the tea leaves about the Democratic party as presently staffed and their policies.

Senate Races Absent enormous voting cheating of the sort we saw in 2020, I think Donald Trump will win. For the first time in decades, more voters have registered as Republicans than Democrats. Then look at what's happening in four swing states:

Ads have been released that show four Democratic Senate candidates in battleground states either working with former President Donald Trump or agreeing with his messaging as the November election is less than a month away.

Campaign ads for Rep. Elissa Slotkin in Michigan, Sen. Sherrod Brown in Ohio, Sen. Bob Casey in Pennsylvania, and Sen. Tammy Baldwin in Wisconsin focus on the Democratic candidates' alliance with Trump or his policies, implying that aligning with the former president may benefit their campaigns more than siding with Democratic presidential nominee Kamala Harris.

While Trump is behind Harris by 1.4 points according to the RealClearPolitics polling average, he leads the vice president in every battleground state. Then there's the Al Smith Catholic Charity dinner. This is a major event every four years where the candidates roast each other at a dinner, the proceeds of which go to support charities. From its inception until this year, only Walter Mondale skipped it. Kamala Harris skipped it this year, submitting instead a video with an actress who is openly anti-Catholic and which was so insulting to the Catholic Church that in his closing benediction, Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan omitted mention of her. Trump, who chatted and joked amiably with longtime foe Chuck Schumer, was greeted by another foe, Governor Kathy Hochul, and prosecutor Letitia James, whose case against him is in the process of being thrown out on appeal, was in the audience looking less than overly confident. Trump got in a number of zingers, but this by SNL's Jim Gaffigan, seemed in the video I saw, to have brought down the house:

"The Democrats have been telling us Trump's reelection is a threat to democracy. In fact, they were so concerned of this threat, they staged a coup, ousted their democratically elected incumbent, and installed Kamala Harris.

"Sometimes [all her] prayers take 3.5 years and a George Clooney op-ed."

They all know, and so do we. The effort to save the day by dumping Biden, installing Harris, and keeping the same idiotic policies and advisers has failed. Time to turn the page back to Trump.
