As we come up on Thanksgiving, I want to express again my thanks to everyone for their hard work that ensured this election truly was a red wave. I also give thanks to our God who heard and answered our fervent prayers to reelect President Donald J. Trump. That was no small thing, but gives merit to the verse in II Chronicles 7:14-20 "If My people who are called by My name will humble themselves, pray and seek My face, and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and heal their land". Our land is not yet healed, so continue to pray and seek His face.

I've watched some You Tube podcasts recently that indicate President Trump is not only making plans, but that he has already begun speaking with foreign leaders to help kick things off. I've also heard he has about 500 attorneys ready to handle any lawsuits that come up, and they will. I'm excited to hear who President Trump appoints into various cabinet positions, and it appears he's already decided a few.

There is still work ahead to hold on to the position we currently possess. However, first I want to wish everyone a wonderful Thanksgiving, spent with family and friends to rest, reflect on and give thanks for what is truly important. Take time to renew your strength so that beginning January 20th, 2025 we will be ready, alongside your fellow Republicans in Lake Havasu City, Mohave County, the state of Arizona (which is once again RED), President Trump, Vice President Vance, and the newly appointed Trump/Vance cabinet, to continue fighting for our country! Matthew Hartman did a presentation about Honor Flight Arizona at the November meeting. I believe in supporting organizations that honor our veterans, so I am providing more information about this awesome organization: <https://honorflightaz.org/>. You can learn about ways to get involved, including becoming a sponsor or recommend a veteran in your life to go on a flight. Wow! Great Job.

SPOTLIGHT MEMBER – JODI SAEGESSER

I grew up in a law enforcement family in Tucson. My mother instilled in me desire to be of service to my community, a love of photography, and an appreciation of the beautiful desert night sky. To this day, my favorite hobbies are astronomy and photography. I joined the Brownies followed by the Girl Scouts, learning more about community service (and the selling of cookies). My first political experience was as a poll page for the Carter -Regan election. I kept the lines moving! While in Tucson, I enjoyed the outdoors. I was a bicyclist, hiker, competitive speed swimmer, and a nationally ranked competitive synchronized swimmer.

After moving to Texas, I joined the Young Republicans club in high school. The first campaign I volunteered on was for Judge Pat Baskin. Soon after, Phil Graham spoke to our class about switching parties and I have been hooked on politics ever since. Upon starting a family, I became an activist in local politics volunteering for local campaigns. Having come from a low performing school, education has always been priority. I was a founding member of a charter school in Texas, served on the board, and was president of the booster club. Using my degree in Political Science and Geography, I moved up in the political realm, I built a strong network of grassroots volunteers and activists. We won some and we lost some, winning is the best!

I have had the privilege and honor to have worked for three members of Congress for a combined 17 years. Congressman Michael Burgess, MD (TX26) Congressman Joe Barton (TX06), Working in the district allowed me to maintain my connection with our community. It involved a variety of functions from assisting with, Community Evacuation Center, Ebola response, multiple state and federal declared disasters, immigration policy, immigration casework, military Academy nominations, and selecting the district interns. We accomplished a lot of rewarding work within our communities. Boy, do I have some stories.

During this time, I completed my emergency management professional development series, FEMA emergency management advanced professional series as well as the critical infrastructure series. After living in downtown Chicago for two years during the riots, we moved to Vermilion Ohio. Joined the local Republican party and worked feverishly to get a new and upcoming senator elected, JD Vance. Opportunity knocked and we were blessed to return home to Arizona where could be close to my family and back in the desert, the beautiful night sky I've missed. Once again, I became involved with the party and was elected vice chair this past summer, and I haven't had a day off since. We just completed a very successful GOTV campaign in a very successful general election. Congratulations Mohave County!

Happy Havasu Republicans on 11-10-24

Will Trump finally end the socialist scourge in America?

By Catherine Sprague

I believe that Trump is trying to defeat socialism forever. It's an important idea that deserves more scrutiny. Trump wants to fix American systems so that wokeness and left-wing progressivism will go away and never come back.

"Tosh!" people say. "Socialism always comes back," and that's certainly a real risk.

It is true that Trump holds a unique pull and, therefore, can draw many to vote Republican, but one day, he'll be gone, leaving many Americans vulnerable to the mainstream media. While MSNBC has lost much credibility, as evidenced by its recent viewership loss, other news outlets controlled by the left, including NBC, CNN, and the New York Times, still have faithful followings.

Nor can we forget the 73,680,469 who voted for Kamala Harris. I know moderates who voted for Kamala who were willing to ignore her radical history even though her presidency would be entirely inimical to their interests. The young, our future, are still being indoctrinated at universities. These individuals remain influencers of their neighbors and friends. If this persists unchecked, then yes, socialism will come back.

But again, that's not inevitable. For example, slavery didn't come back. We'll never be the Old South again. And while many still oppose gay marriage, which is their right, there's no question that life is easier for homosexuals. Although the Democrat party has driven the LGBTQ+ agenda to off-putting extremes and then used those extremes to tar Republicans, they've managed to make gay marriage a more acceptable concept.

As of 2022, the percentage of Americans who support gay marriage is up significantly in the past 20 years. Even 43% of Republicans have favorable views toward gay marriage.

Our country has grown and improved over the centuries, guided by our Constitution, just as our founders intended it to. Who says it's impossible to put socialism in the past forever, too?

Conservatives have long suspected that our government has engaged in criminal activity at home and abroad. Recently, these suspected crimes have advanced Democrat policies and administrations.

If conservatives are correct and this knowledge ever becomes public, say in the form of formal charges, it would be a game changer. Everyone assumes this is impossible, but I would argue that that's precisely why it is possible. No one would be prepared for Trump to act by exposing this information—although it's rumored that members of the Deep State are already lawyering up.

The media would be fully exposed as the fraudulent Democrat operatives they are, which, one hopes, will destroy them. With the Democrats' propaganda arm broken, many on the left will come back to reason and reality.

Brandon Straka's #walk away movement, which encourages liberals to walk away from the left, once featured a woman who said her views changed when a move cut her off from cable news.

Leftists commonly accuse Republicans of doing things that leftists themselves do. Were Trump to expose the rank-and-file to their party's crimes, they would finally look in the mirror and realize how, all along, they, not Trump supporters, were the people they hated. Under these circumstances, I argue that socialism can be eradicated in the United States, which would no doubt influence the rest of the world.

Is this the "unfinished business" Trump says he needs to finish in his second term? He's also spoken about defeating the "enemy within" and a "golden era." He's told Christians he won't need their vote after this election because he'll have it "fixed so good." While it might be argued that Trump was just using hyperbole in this instance, one must wonder: could it be that Trump will pull off the seemingly impossible? We've yet to see what his administration will accomplish in round two but the possibilities are exciting.

Democrats' Frowns Brought Americans No Joy

By J.B. Shurk

I'm not much of a spontaneous laugher, but the explosion of videos with people doing the "Trump Dance" just cracks me up. When President Trump started showing off a few of his signature moves during the 2020 campaign, I thought the whimsical addition to his rallies provided a bit of levity to an otherwise stressful time, during which COVID dominated the headlines. Then I noticed that college-aged social media users had adapted Trump's routine into a game similar to Dance Dance Revolution. Trending videos on YouTube and TikTok highlighted young people trying to replicate his movements with a split screen showing Trump dancing on one side and competitive mimics on the other. The "Trump Dance" became a cultural phenomenon.

The late, great Andrew Breitbart was keen on reminding conservatives that politics is downstream from culture. It is only right, then, that his eponymous publication featured a story a few days ago that captured how popular the "Trump Dance" has become. The Breitbart article includes videos of Argentinian president Javier Milei breaking out to the "Trump Dance" with supporters, San Francisco 49ers star Nick Bosa celebrating with his teammates on the field, and numerous young men and women enjoying the Donald Trump dance craze. If you look at any social media platform, you can find videos of people all over the world doing the "Trump Dance" at parties, in bars, at sporting events, and near historical landmarks. The funny little dance is a global sensation.

Now, this might seem silly to a lot of people. We have so many serious problems today, and Americans struggling to make ends meet don't have time for an extra helping of nonsense. Allow me to suggest, however, that the widespread enthusiasm for the "Trump Dance" is a healthy sign for a society that has been deprived of authentic joy for far too long.

It is no coincidence that Kamala Harris's presidential campaign avoided real policy issues and concentrated on selling "joy" to the American people. Polling consistently shows that Americans have never been so unhappy, and during Biden's presidency, a record share of the electorate has agreed that the country is on the wrong track. Democrats tried to spackle over these ugly numbers with fake displays of happiness. They relied on celebrity musicians, actors, and influencers to smile for the cameras and tell voters how excited they were to vote for Kamala Harris. This media blitz of artificial joy failed.

Why is that? Because Democrats abandoned authentic joy long ago. They turned their backs on American history and took a knee during patriotic tributes. They rejected the concerns of blue-collar workers and began openly mocking people with dirt under their fingernails. They moved away from the inspirational rhetoric of past Democrats such as President Kennedy and embraced a dark worldview in which Americans are divided into discrete identity groups and forced to fight one another. When you think of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Ilhan Omar, Rashida Tlaib, or other members of the Democrat "Squad," you don't picture smiling faces. You imagine angry frowns.

This is the Democrat party that President Barack Obama and Attorney General Eric Holder built. Americans across the political spectrum had hoped that Obama's 2008 victory would be the beginning of a national renewal in which petty racial divisions could be forever relegated to the past. Instead of seizing the moment as a singular opportunity to heal old wounds and rejuvenate the country, however, Obama and Holder chose to pit Americans against one another. In the half-century preceding Obama's historic election, race relations steadily improved. After Obama's election, race relations steadily degraded. Democrats and the propaganda press have done their best to falsely blame renewed divisions on white conservatives' "unconscious racism." In reality, conservatives of all skin colors had hoped that Obama's presidency would usher in a new era of American unity.

Instead, Obama and Holder proved that their Marxist inclinations severely outweigh any nobler impulses. As proponents of Saul Alinsky's Rules for Radicals and ideologues who worked constantly to politicize the most personal aspects of Americans' lives, Obama and Holder specialized in rubbing salt in old wounds. They told us that America is not exceptional, that America's history is nothing to celebrate, and that America's heroes are all irredeemably bad. They told us that America is "systemically racist," that the Constitution is a relic of "white supremacy," and that the country must be "fundamentally transformed." Michelle Obama told us that she had never been "proud" of her country until her husband's meteoric political rise. Obama and Holder's anti-American negativity so infected the temperament of their party that President Biden and other prominent Democrats have repeatedly argued that America was never that great. For nearly two decades, the Democrat party has soaked in this acid bath of dour pessimism and grim hatred for the country that it seeks to lead.

It is hard to believe that young Americans who have just become old enough to vote have never lived during a time when oppressive "political correctness" and social media censorship were not the norm. They have no memories of a time before public finger-wagging and online mobs hell-bent on "canceling" groupthink offenders. They cannot relate to a time when Democrats and Republicans could disagree about important issues and still enjoy one another's company. This era bereft of great comedy, satire, and intellectual debate is all they know. This joyless wasteland has been the Obama-Holder legacy.

It is all the more ironic, then, that Democrats have spent the last decade trying to tarnish Donald Trump as a "dark" and "divisive" figure intent on spreading "hateful" misery. As assiduously as they have worked to push that lie, Americans can see the truth. Obama's Democrat party is a struggle session of stern lectures and disappointed frowns. President Trump's MAGA movement is a boisterous celebration filled with happy people sporting wide smiles. You can't fake "joy." Kamala Harris learned that lesson the hard way. President Trump, on the other hand, is filled with so much authentic joy that he creates pop culture attractions with something as simple as a little dance. His joyful determination in the face of hardship is why he gained substantial support from young people in 2024.

President Trump's political movement is changing the world for the better. After the attempt on his life at the Butler Farm Show Grounds in Pennsylvania on July 13, online images circulated of a guardian angel tapping the president on the shoulder, moving his head slightly to the right, and saving his life from an assassin's bullet. In Japan, this guardian angel took the form of Shinzo Abe – the Japanese prime minister who was good friends with President Trump and who was assassinated in 2022. So strong is Trump's connection with the Japanese people that they felt invested in his survival. This kind of bond with an American leader is not normal, but it has become an undeniable feature of the Trump Era.

At Mar-a-Lago last week, Sylvester Stallone introduced President Trump at a black-tie affair with some touching words. Comparing Trump to his creation, Rocky Balboa, Stallone described the president as a "mythical character" who has gone through a "metamorphosis" and "change[d] lives" for the better. "This individual does not exist on this planet," Stallone remarked. "Nobody in the world could have pulled off what he pulled off, so I'm in awe."

It is clear that Stallone is hardly alone in seeing President Trump as not only a legendary American but also a consequential world figure. Across the globe, friends and foes have expressed admiration for the man. He has taken on the mantle of peacemaker, change agent, and future-builder. He inspires hope. He nurtures joy. It is no surprise, then, that so many follow his lead...and dance.
